

Meet Brent M. Bremer Workers' Compensation Attorney

Brent Bremer's legal career began in 1983 when he graduated from the Emory University School of Law receiving a Doctor of Law degree. Prior to that, he attended Emory University earning an undergraduate Bachelor of Arts degree in Political Science in 1980.

Since 1986, he has specialized in the field of workers' compensation law and has limited his practice to job-related injuries for wage earners all across the State of Georgia.

Brent does not currently represent and will not represent any employers or insurance companies.

Brent has been a member of the State Bar of Georgia since 1983. He is the founder and Executive Director of the workers' compensation claimants' lawyer political action committee (WIN-PAC), the Political Director for the Georgia Injured Workers' Advocates (GIWA), and a member of the Workers' Compensation Claimant's Lawyer section of the Georgia Trial Lawyers' Association.

Since his law office is focused solely on helping injured employees in the workers' compensation system, he can deliver the highest level of personal service to his clients all over Georgia. Your case will be handled by Brent Bremer personally and not by an associate lawyer, paralegal or secretary. Brent makes every effort to answer his own telephone to provide direct personal service to his clients without screening of calls. He strongly believes that disability cases cannot be handled properly without close contact between the lawyer and the client.

Brent has lived in Georgia all of his life and resides in Atlanta. He was born in 1958 in Sylvester, Georgia. He attended high school at Woodward Academy in College Park, Georgia.
