

Rat Characteristics

Most people can recognize a rat on sight by their size, furry body and long tail. Rats tend to eat almost anything. Therefore, the kitchen pantry and cabinets are a favorite place for rats to reside. Many times, home owners will find rat droppings in the corners of shelves and drawers. Rats are often nocturnal creatures, but they can be discovered any time of the day or night as they scavenge about the house. They can climb quickly and often choose quiet, dark spaces in which to nest. Once they nest, rats can have large litters. Therefore, once a rat has nested in a home, then the problem will intensify as each baby rat begins to reproduce.

Rat Prevention in Andover

The best way to prevent a rat infestation is to practice good sanitation around the home. Garbage should be bagged and placed in containers with lids. Any potential nesting areas should be sealed off so that the rats cannot enter the home. Because rats are climbers, tree branches should be trimmed away from the exterior of the house so that rats cannot gain access through attics and chimneys.

Rat Elimination by Alamo Pest Control

It has been said that a home with a cat will never have a rat problem. However, that simply is not true. Rats multiply quickly and can easily become more than one cat or one person can handle. Rat traps and poison are often recommended for rat problems. These can be successful, but they also are dangerous to small children and pets. In order to effectively handle a rat problem, it is recommended to contact a professional pest control service. Our qualified and experienced pest control technicians are capable of identifying and eliminating a rat infestation so that your family's health and home will be safe.
